Course overview

Working in community services is one of the most rewarding career opportunities, bringing you into contact with a wonderfully diverse range of people who come from varying backgrounds and situations. Studying this qualification will give you a broad understanding of community services and the skills to responsibly supervise other staff members and volunteers.

A Diploma of Community Services covers work in service delivery, direct work with clients, community education and development projects. Once you've completed the diploma, you'll be able to specialise in many support areas, including aged care, disability and mental health services. Our diploma is accredited by the Australian Community Workers Association (ACWA), which will increase your chances of finding a great role in this field. Make a difference in the lives of other people and join the growing community services industry.

This course is delivered with a combination of online and on campus workshops.
